Dweople
(dwee' pel)
Dwelling People

People and memories live in dwellings. People dwell in our memory. Their presence and absence fill our abodes. Interior memories coexist with exterior realities as the inside and outside merge in the Dweople paintings.

With color and whimsy, dwellings and people converge as Dweople. The presence of a new reality appears with the invention of dwellings that defy convention and exist on legs with little feet suggesting the delicate balance between memory and reality. A playful optimism teases the viewer as the forms, referring to dwellings and people, are juxtaposed. Some hold hands, some hold memories. Dweople inhabit my paintings.
